MARCONI'S OVER-SEA 'AIRGRAM' BUSINESS OPENS WITH A RUSH

Commercial Messages From All Parts Heap Up, but Inventor and His Force Keep the Pace, and System Works Perfectly.

(Special to The Evening World)

SIDNEY, N. S., Oct. 17.—Commercial aerograms, traversing the Atlantic ocean at the speed of some millions of miles a second, became an established fact at 2 o'clock this afternoon, when the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company began sending transatlantic messages at

It was also suggested that she might have been drowned accidentally in the choppy seas. But the young woman's father, Norman B. Archer, a rich book-binder, said from the first that he believed his daughter had thrown herself overbeard while mentally excited as a result of the strain of intense study and disappointment at her failure to win a course in Vassar College.

A few weeks before she was lost she had developed melanohalla from ever-work at her books.

The father, Mr. Archer, has never relaxed his efforts to find the body. He has spent a large sum in the hire of boats and men, who have secured the maters of the boy daily.
